

Blog Editors' Note

Anna Sophia Habib, Esther Namubiru, and Weijia Li

We're excited to share what's happening on the blog. This spring, our Global Spotlight features two writing centers in South Africa. From the Slow Agency podcast, we bring to you conversations with colleagues in the Middle East and in Ghana about the role of writing and writing center work from a decolonial perspective. We also have a rich conversation with the co-editors of the 2022 edited collection, Emotions and Affect in Writing Centers. For our WLN author series, we interview two writers about their thought-provoking pieces in WLN's special edition on the post-pandemic writing center, co-edited by Noreen Lape and John Katunich. Listen to Slow Agency on our website <https://wlnjournal.org/blog/slow-agency/> or wherever you get your podcasts. And please subscribe to the podcast and our YouTube channel. It's free and it helps us spread the word about writing centers around the globe!

Most recently, we've been contemplating the heated discussions on ChatGPT and what this new AI tool means for writing centers and writing center work. We'd love to hear your thoughts on this topic! Please submit a piece or pitch an idea for a podcast episode to writinglabnewsletterblog@gmail.com. And, subscribe to the blog by visiting www.wlnjournal.org/blog.